Therefore the BMS can only see 15 cells, so if one of the pair goes wrong it can't do anything about the second one.

Answer: Batteries of different capacities can be used in parallel, but the following conditions must be met: 1. Same voltage: Batteries in parallel must have the same voltage, otherwise it may cause current instability or battery damage. 2. Same battery type and structure: Batteries of different types (such as lead-acid batteries, lithium batteries) or structures (such as flooded and lean ...
